Everybody enjoys winning. However, the meaning of victory is so mysterious. Those who are successful make it seem so simple that we are all curious about how it's done. Perhaps that's why we love success stories. Here are a few snippets of success:

A reporter once asked a bank president what the secret of his success was. 'Two words,' said the bank president. 'Right decisions.' When he was asked how he learnt to make these, the bank president gave a one-word response. 'Experience.' Hoping for a more satisfying answer, the reporter asked him how he got his experience. 'Two words,' said the bank president. 'Wrong decisions!'

In another interview, a farmer who grew award-winning corn revealed that he shared his best seeds with his neighbours. The reporter was surprised that the farmer was risking being outdone by his neighbours. 'I know it seems illogical, but if I don't share, then the risk is greater,' explained the farmer. 'When the wind picks up pollen from the corn, it blows it from field to field. If my neighbours grow bad corn, I will too. Unless I help them, I won't be able to grow good corn. We are all connected.'

A shoe company once sent two salesmen to investigate the market of a developing country. 'Nobody will buy shoes here,' said the first salesman confidently. 'They don't wear them.' In contrast, the second salesman reported 'We will sell thousands of shoes in a year,' 'They are all barefoot!' he added.
